

My proudest achievement is meeting my wife but in the professional aspect my biggest success was the production of our brand new crypto asset management system and I see people are using it not as we would like, but demand is definitely there. It might look as a pocket project but I am very proud of it. We have already attracted dozens of hundreds of users and more are on the way. I am proud of it because all the work was done by me and my partner - everything from concept to development was done only by us. It is quite difficult to keep such a project in mind, so I had to write documentation in order not to forget the essence. Naturally, there were some problems - once testing the functionality brought us real losses, so we came to the conclusion not to test on the real world and make a mocking interface for this. We also managed to gather a small community of regular users, so we always develop and do not stand still. I have almost finished my part of the work on this project. I have tried to make this system as easy to expand as possible so that my partner can work without my direct involvement.

For more than two years I have been working in a team with my partner and I consider this a serious experience not only from the point of view of software development but also from the point of view of life experience
